Q.-3. “ ‘I am going to her, and you, darling child shall come to us’, and never stirred or spoke again,, but continued that rapt, radiant gaze, till his pulse imperceptibly stopped and his soul departed.”

ANS.

These lines occur in Emily Bronte’s famous novel, “Wuthering Heights” which also won the prestigious Nobel Prize for her.

In these lines Edgar Linton expresses his grief caused due to his separation from his daughter Catherine for four days. He lays an image of sadness and resignation awaiting his death. Finally Catherine arrived at the Grange. Edgar was alive at that time. He found his daughter before his eyes , became happy and satisfied. He kissed his daughter's cheek and murmured that he was going to his beloved wife..He also told her to follow him. He continued to stare in her face till his soul departed from his body.

These lines reflect Edgar's deep and real love for his wife. In fact, she did not love him so much as she herself once accepted that her love for him is like a foliage which would be changed as the cycle of season changed.
